

Power to the Children

Nina Patsey

Power to the Children!

Research explorations

A light blue ceramic plate with a scalloped edge is centered on a pink watercolor background. The plate is covered with brown crumbs and small clumps of food. The text "Dinner Games" is written in a pink, cursive font across the middle of the plate.

Dinner Games

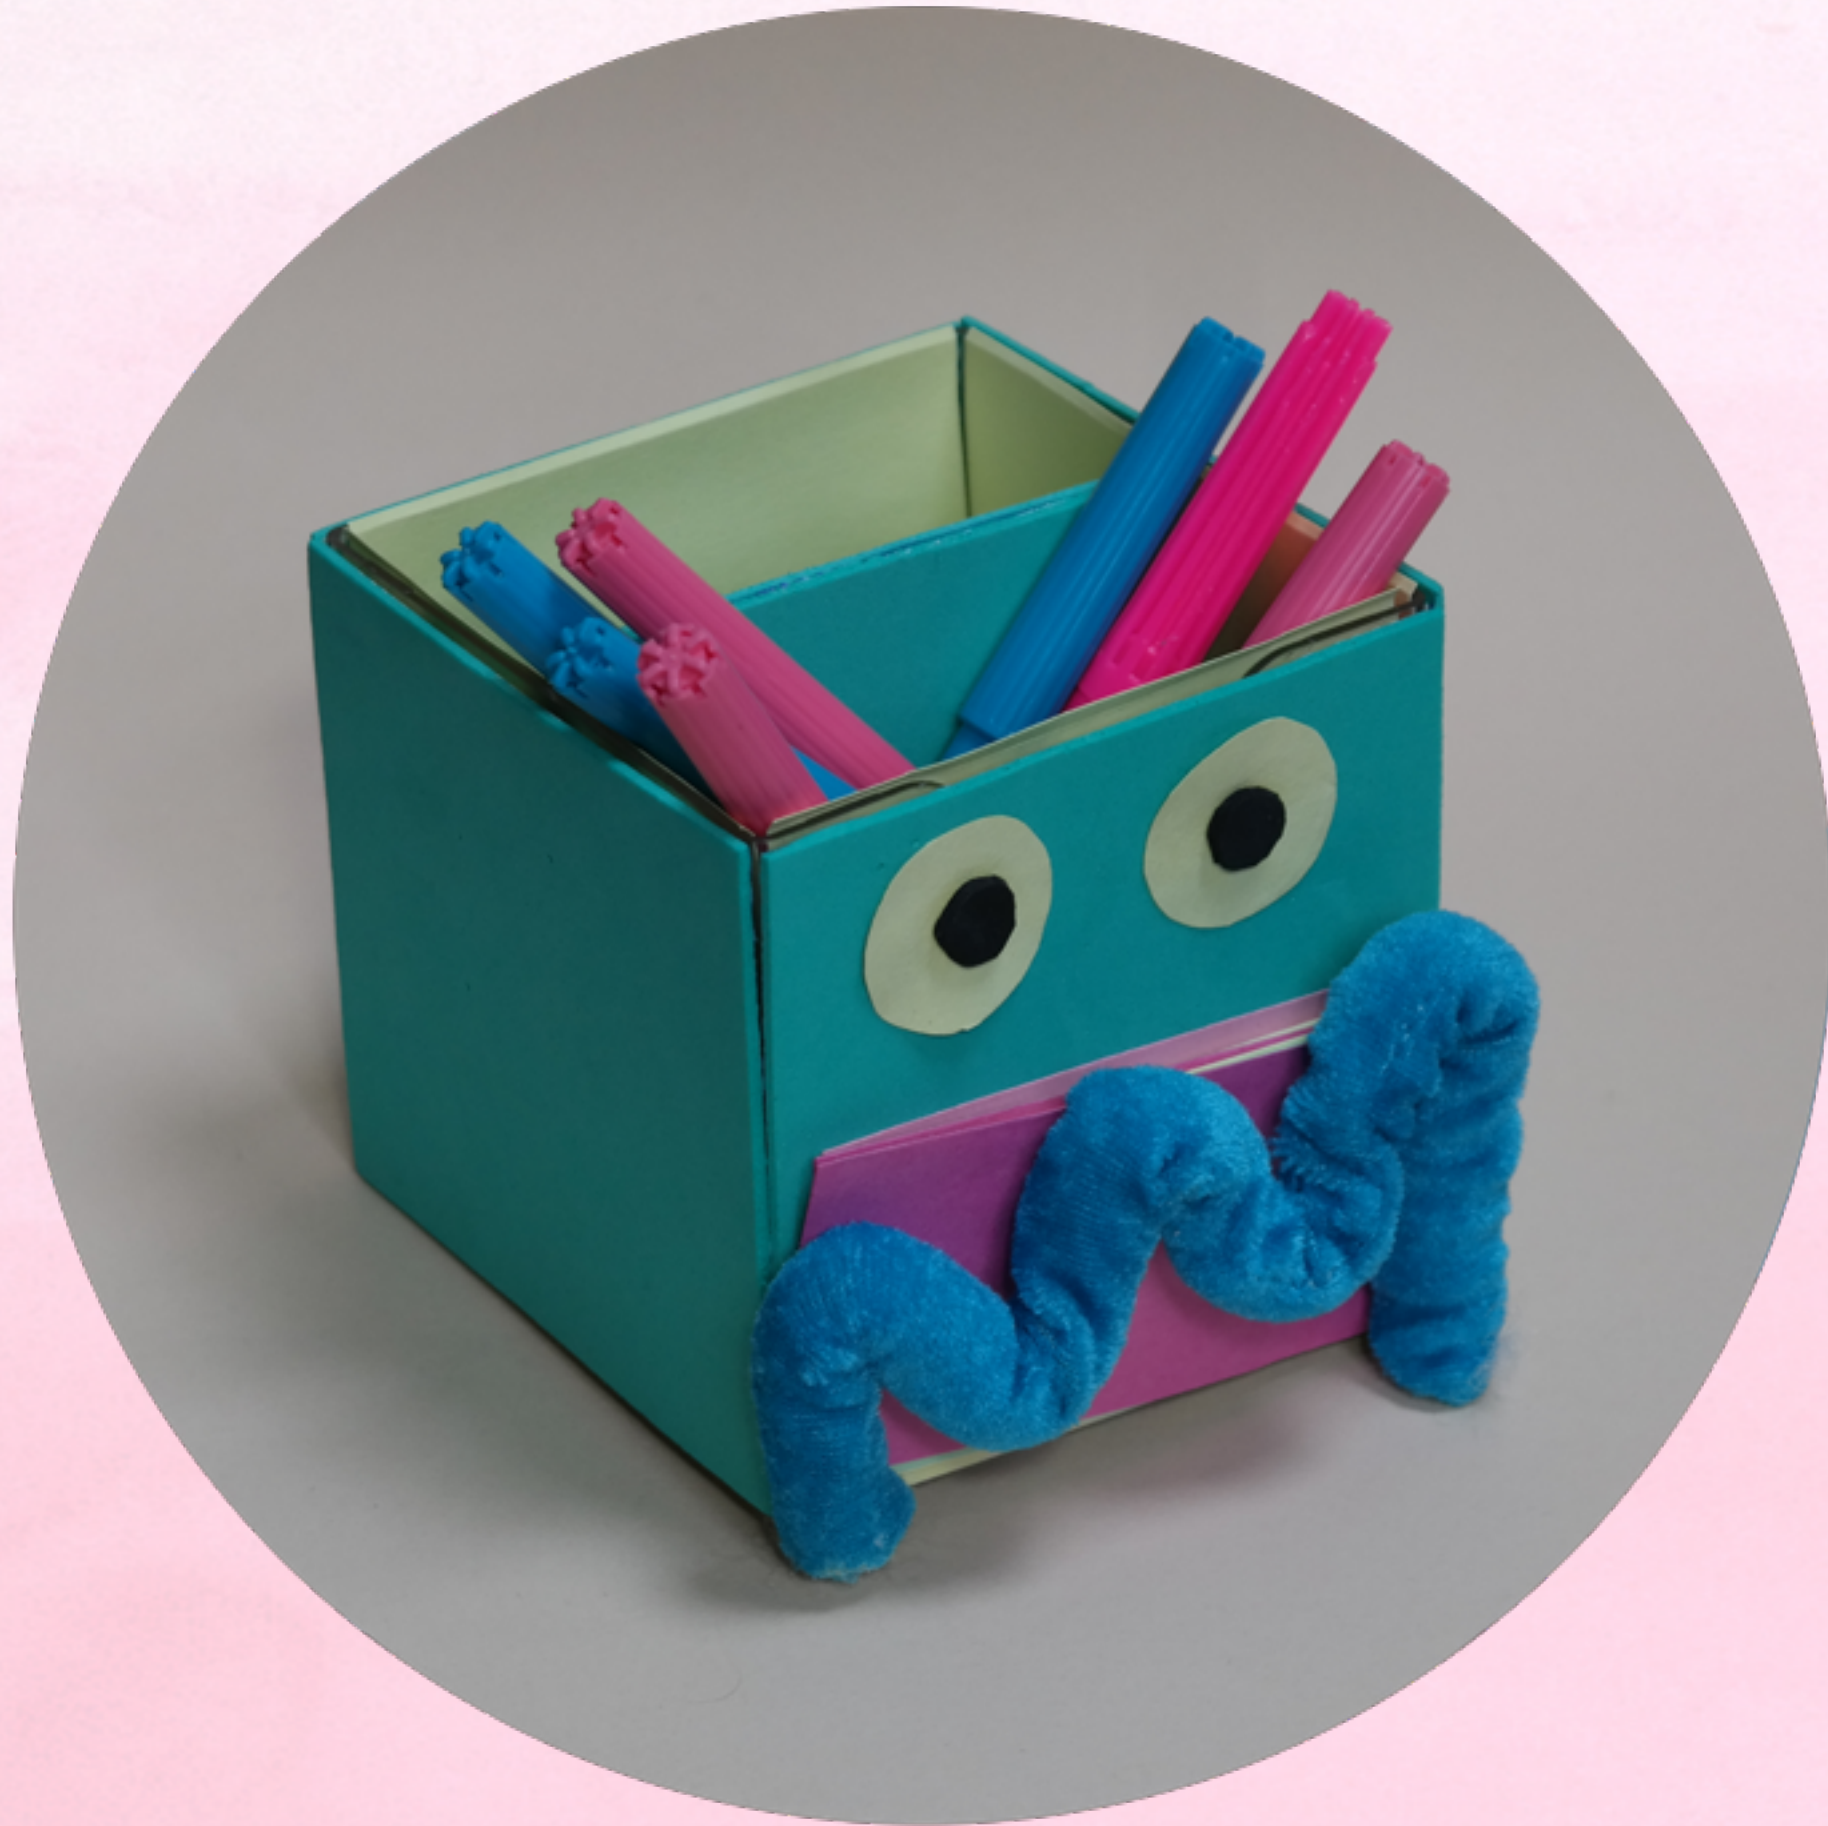

Observed interactions

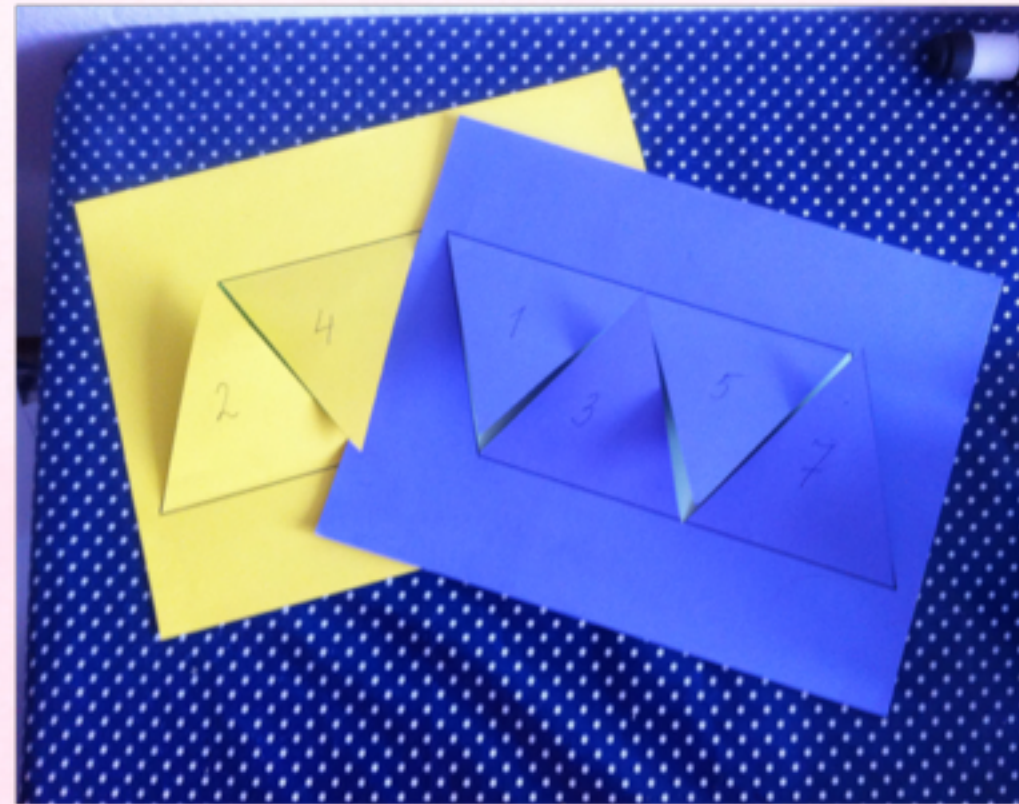

Design Goal:

Enrich interaction among parents and children during dinner

Design explorations

Design explorations

Research explorations

Research explorations

Conclusion

- * children should have a chance to give their answer
- * the product should have a connection with dinner
- * the answers are less important, it's about the moment with you family
- * parents don't have much time
- * not all families eat a dessert after dinner
- * playing games went very well, but missed something...

Interaction vision

spectacle on the table

shared, but at the same time personal

“Like drinking tea out of festive service”

cosy and relaxed, but at the same fascinating and surprising

Final Design

Af en Toe...

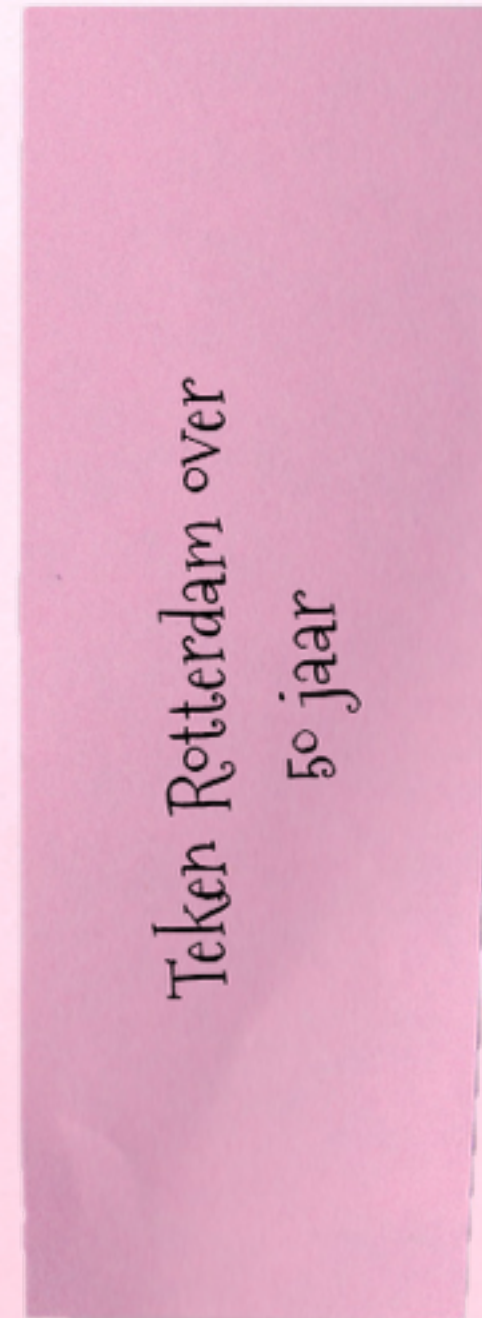

Af en Toe

napkin

question

spoon-pencil

social, educational and enjoyable interactions among family members

Children learn creative and critical thinking, and practice social skills

